In the spirit of the CPRA, the Councilmember himself went through his personal account to sift through city business related emails during the time periods you provided.

During those months, there were some emails pertaining to city business (most of them included his daily calendar - the most voluminous source of city related documents found) versus thousands of private/personal/non-city business emails he received/sent. However, a few of those emails would be considered deliberative and thus, exempt from the CPRA.

As you know, if the content of the emails are personal in nature--and not considered a writing that relates "to the conduct of the people's business", they are not required to be produced under the CPRA.

The numerous emails containing the Councilmember's daily calendar will take a longer time to produce as there will be redactions of personal phone numbers and email addresses. I can have them produced by the 31st of December.

Attached are the documents responsive to your request, excluding the calendar.
